General Comment

Why are you continuing to give these parasites light treatment when they're stealing everything they can get their hands on to replace it with cheap, lower grade slop that ruins every single place it touches? Did I miss the declaration that the current administration of the United States are thieving communists? These A.I companies should already be in prison for large scale theft, not asking the President to make it legal!

The U.S.A creative industry to my knowledge adds a value of $1.1 trillion to the U.S. economy, 4.3% of the country's GDP. Yet the country is expected to side with people, one of which being a freak accused of fingering his own sister, who have failed to provide anything of worth? Elites from Silicon Valley who've filled the internet with unreliable data, pornography of all stripes, falsified photographs of the President sucking Elon Musk's toes and worse?

And that is just the creative industry. What other areas of the U.S.A economy will A.I companies, who have already proven to be worthless by themselves, destroy in the name of profits they've yet to make?

This doesn't just affect people with intellectual properties either, but anyone who wishes to show any type of photograph online for others to see. Why am I expected to share anything online, which was already a risky prospect before, if I have no legal right over what I present? Does the President and others in government like the idea of photographs of themselves being used for whatever purpose any person using A.I software wants?

As a foreigner I can say this, if the U.S.A goes through with this pathetic idea to let Open A.I and other companies upend copyright, destroy the creative industry and what safety the internet has, then there is utterly nothing I'd want from your country. Your creative exports will be machine generated s&^% not worth stealing, yet alone buying. God knows what other American industries or services I'll end up labelling as worthless if this madness continues. I'm already wondering if I should leave my own country over the government considering a similar change in law. America is not going to attract me to it by doing the same.

If China truly wants to become a s&^% nation full of people incapable of doing anything whose main export is degenerative pornography and lies, let them. But if President Trump and the United States wishes to have any respect in the world then they'll tell these companies to obey the law like everyone else and produce something of actual value, not toys for the retarded that require large scale theft. Though the funny thing there is, as far as I'm aware, China has in fact placed rules and regulations on these companies. So they've done more to protect my rights than the United States or the United Kingdom have as of late.

Frankly as far as I'm concerned these companies shouldn't be allowed to use public domain at all. But if they do exist, maybe the great America can at least insist they be created fairly without destroying large swaths of what made your country great? Or is President Trump and the Republican Party just the servants of West Coast, Silicon Valley elites who'll do as they're told?
