General Comment

A.I. companies have worked with large tech firms to blatantly violate copyright law and the safe harbor protection that sites like Reddit, Twitter, and Facebook hide behind to avoid regulation. They have simultaneously claimed no ownership over the data shared on their site to hold themselves blameless for any content they fail to moderate while packaging up this data and selling it to A.I. companies. Neither of these group can prove any ownership of any of the information they are using to train their algorithms and are releasing them into the world without any regard for the damage they will do.

They are actively encouraging the destruction of jobs in favor of AI automation that provides a worse experience for Americans and gives another layer of deniability for companies to fail to meet their obligations when providing a service. It has become increasingly difficult to make contact with a human at any large tech firm over the last decade and their use of AI chatbots has exacerbated this problem exponentially. We are unable to resolve any problem no matter it's level of severity as we are never able to get passed the AI chat bot to engage with a human able to understand the actual problem.

We can not allow this continued malicious incompetence to degrade consumer protections further.

We need to take AI out of private hands, it is simply not a tool that can be used ethically for profit. It has and will continue to rip away at the ability of our country to function. It is being pitched as both a tool and a weapon to fear monger us into throwing infinite money into these companies with the promise that they will give us the edge. This is a lie. They know that they will sell anything they make to anyone who will buy it and they know that the real threat AI offers humanity is in how it's proliferation will disrupt and disable the industries it is used in.

To the person reading this, I beg you, please do not believe their marketing. A.I. will not save us, it will not benefit us. If left in their hands it is simply going to be used to harm us further and siphon more money to a handful of billionaires while the rest of us suffer.
