General Comment

I am one of thousands of small U.S. publishers whose livelihood depends upon people finding our websites and coming to our niche corners of the web for information, advice, solutions and answers. Over the past decade, I have supported my family financially thanks to the website which I created, and continue to build. As my site grew, I was able to employ other US citizens as well. The increasing utilization of AI has spelled catastrophe to small publishers around the country such as myself. Google swipes our human-generated work without permission and uses it to train its AI models which can then serve up our work without any credit to the creator. Copyright law must be considered, appreciated and upheld as the utilization of AI continues to grow. If it is not, there will be no new content, articles, photography, art, etc created as there will be no incentive for creators to create. If people cannot get paid for their work, they cannot continue to fuel our economy and be productive citizens. Small publishers have been a valuable part of our US economy for over a decade, and while it is a relatively new industry, it is growing, important, and valuable. All of these small businesses who employ many others in this country will fail if AI continues to steal our work without compensation and attribution. Please protect small businesses as you consider creation of the Artificial Intelligence Action Plan. Many Americans, and the economy we contribute to will suffer if big tech is allowed to profit on our hard work without any consideration.
