General Comment

Google and other AI companies have destroyed my online publishing business.

My business employed up to 10 American content producers at its peak. I've produced over 700 human-written online articles that took considerable time, expertise, and expense to produce for the benefit of my readers.

Google and other for-profit AI companies have scraped my content without providing compensation, and are profiting tremendously from the toil of Americans that I've had to terminate from employment due to growing lack of online traffic generated due to the changes to Google's now AI first algorithm.

This is one of the biggest injustices in the modern landscape and my hope is that regulators will step in to ensure creators are duly compensations for the value we've provided in enabling these AI companies to grow.

Or else, the future of the diverse creator economy is certainly doomed to perish.
