General Comment

In a world where copyrights protect individual, groups, and organizations from their creation being stolen from them, monetized without their permission, and protected from abuse, this protection deserves to remain a policy for all industries. No one should get an exception. If AI companies cannot train their AIs without ethics, then those AIs should not exist. If AI companies cannot train their AIs without stealing people's work, then those AIs should not exist. In theory, AI is a good thing that is going to allow for more individuals to have the freedom to do what they want, but if we can't get there without AIs scraping content from every inch of the internet, then we don't deserve AI. Please do not give in to the tech industry and their lies. They can follow the laws as they currently exist around copyrights. And you can enforce them if they don't.
