General Comment

While I understand the argument of the benefits of utilizing AI (improved productivity, springboarding, etc), I feel there are way more negative effectives than good when using AI.

Most importantly, relying on AI causes a huge detriment to individuals as it limits critical thinking, skill building, and quality control.

It's sad to see that the increase in wanting companies and individuals to use AI is marketed as a time saver / promotes improved productivity, when in reality it's just causing people to put all their trust in a machines output vs actively improving their intellect and improving their skills. Why learn to draw when you can have a machine pump out a sh*t rendering of a woman with 7 fingers? Why rely on and have conversations with professionals in select fields when you can believe the information being spat out at you; which ultimately can cause more harm to individuals. Example: People relying on medical advice, building advice, etc

In addition, I oppose any program, software, company, etc that demotes the important of ethics. The fact the world is so hungry for AI when we have to build server farms to keep up with the output is just devastating. We would rather force feed people to rely on AI to line corporate pockets with record breaking profits instead of protecting the planet, and our people, from harm.

Additionally, inevitably, the increase in AI will take away hundreds of thousands of jobs in skilled labor. Again, corporations and shareholders are too interested in profits over the ethics.

I sincerely hope there are people with souls in the Captial...this is the only way things will improve in our country.
