General Comment

Hello, my name is Alexandra, and I am an artist.

The entirety of the AI surge and the concept that these massive companies should be free to steal the handmade work of countless individuals is unlawful, cruel, and absurdity in its highest form. As an artist, I have trained and honed my skills over years to be able to create works on commission in order to pay my bills and make my livelihood. These large scale tech companies have no right to steal the fruits of my labor to feed into their plagiarism machine in order to make their own profits off of my own work. They should not be exempt from the restrictions of copyright laws just because they are a corporation and I am an individual trying to make a living. I am outraged by not only the harm to myself and other artists this industry had impacted by scraping the images and writing that we've created to steal the essence of human creativity and cram it into a program designed to blatantly exploit the work of skilled artisans for these companies to profit off of with no consequence: there is also the horrific consequence to the environment that these programs inflict by requiring massive amounts of water while entire regions of our country are in drought. It's cruel theft of work, it's an affront to the natural resources of our country, and it's a grave insult to artists that people feel entitled to take what we have made and use it for their private gain without any form of contract, payment, or consequence.
