General Comment

I definitely think the guard rail should be removed. We need to give President Trump's friends, such as Elon Musk and Sam Altman, unfettered access to profits so they can continue their domination of the Kingdom of America with no obstacles to whatever power they may want. The fact that the technology is unproven has not yet been shown to actually work properly should not be in any way an obstacle to funneling the whole of American prosperity into their private pockets. There's a long history in America of people deservedly getting paid for things don't work, everything from Trump steaks to Trump University, and it is only right that Trump and his friends get to continue to enrich themselves by defrauding to the American public, and now, to not only receive money from gullible fools, but from everybody, by having it funneled directly to them from the federal government.

We should exempt them from criminal laws, as well, while they're at it. Elon Musk works long days, if he hypothetically wanted to unwind at night by doing heroin or killing a couple of prostitutes, it's unfair that there are laws that stand in his way. It's not fair or right that these people should be subject to the same restrictions and rules that the rest of us are, when they are rich. For that reason, it's wrong to require them to succeed by producing commercial products and succeeding the marketplace, like the rest of us, rather than by getting government money and support funneled directly to them.
