General Comment

The destruction of legal structures for something as feckless and valueless as generative AI is the kind of decision that is in clear disregard of every piece of available information on the matter.

Generative AI has seen consistent failure after failure on the market. Rewriting intellectual theft law to carve out a niche for this tech is an act of brazen apathy for every person and entity that isn't actively bankrolling campaigns. Not to mention that the US has already lost its "AI dominance" given that other countries have produced similar technology at a fraction of the cost. This is a blatant waste of time and money for a government that seems to value "efficiency" although seemingly only in name.
