General Comment

The idea that we have to throw copyright to the wind in the interest of national security is insane and just a blatant giveaway to the big tech firms who already hold outsize influence. If data is so important to these models then these tech companies need to pay for it- we all know they have the money given they're oligarchs and we- the creators of said content are the serfs. And yet it's somehow not important enough to merit paying for it. How can these two ideas exist simultaneously? They can't. The e tech firms have showed their hands- they need this data. They can pay for it.
