General Comment

The only "benefit" this kind of plan would have would be to weaken current protections on all copyrighted materials, in return for nothing of value; generative AI is at best an excuse to do poor work in place of paying for actually good work in creative spheres, and should not be encouraged at all. If anything, a plan should be made to strengthen copyright protections for artists of all stripes to help ensure creative endeavors continue to flourish, rather than seeing them turn into nothing but a cesspool of AI-generated slop that "trains" on more AI garbage.

While AI does have its uses, art and writing and other creative pursuits do not benefit from it at all, and this is not in any way a good use of the country's time and resources.
