General Comment

Creatives deserve to have their work, created with their skills which were acquired based on their time investment and physical labor, protected. Companies have no right to profit off of any artists work, and they have no right to train their AI on it, without positive, opt in consent and appropriate compensation. Copyright law may be flawed but it is the only protection creatives currently have for their work and must be respected. If companies want to train "AI", they need to buy the license to this work. Posting something online does not automatically make it part of creative commons.
