General Comment

I recognize that many people believe that the development of AI is a step forward into the advancement of society. But I implore you to look carefully at what you are allowing corporations to do by lifting restrictions that might impede AI innovation. Doing so would completely destroy the already fragile copyright infrastructure we have. Creative works deserve to have their rights protected, and people who work in creative fields deserve to make a fair living based on the stuff that they create. The prompts it produces do not get generated from nothing, or from an actual intelligent mind, like the term AI would suggest. It is being generated from the data scraped off of the internet. To allow AI to develop without restriction would be a loss of jobs, a loss of privacy, and a terrible step back in societal development.

I say this from the stance of somebody in college for animation. I'm losing hope with every day that I will ever be able to make a living doing something I'm passionate about. Because the federal government wants to decide that the works I create deserve to be in the hands of a 10 billion dollar company producing AI instead of myself. And because corporations believe that paying a subscription fee for the AI company and letting it feed them the stuff it stole from me is cheaper than paying me a living. I have people every day telling me to work as an 'AI Artist' because that's what all the jobs are going to become, and I should jump on the bandwagon. My fears are not unrealistic, they are simply what culture has become. I desperately wish some part of the government agreed that I deserve to be paid; to live.
