General Comment

Any company worth its merit does not require the government to remove the rule of law as a "barrier" for them to succeed. Getting rid of copyright protections when it comes to AI training data is going to hurt the American citizens and their creatives first, and then it will hurt the corporations later. This is a short sighted solution that will undercut every brilliant mind in the US, just to serve the current Tech CEOs who can't thrive without you letting them steal intellectual property to feed into their inefficiently designed AIs.

If you want to beat China in this race, you should incentivize, subsidize, and compensate the valuable and creative minds you have here. Not allow billionaires to legally steal from them.
