General Comment

The use of LLMs has been hurting the American people by infringing copyright, reducing job availability as companies incorrectly believe it will solve problems better than humans, and worsening customer service, as, again, companies resort to replacing real people with machines that can't actually help customers. At present, LLMs are prone to hallucinate, giving incorrect answers and solutions that do not help people. This problem will only get worse as the internet becomes saturated with AI generated content, where machines will be reading this bad data and regurgitating it back to people over and over. I believe AI, particularly LLMs should have greater restrictions in place, not less.
