General Comment

Approving this plan will ultimately be a detriment to our country, not just as creators but for the businesses ignorantly seeking this movement in the first place. They seek a means of accessing our content without consequence, but fail to see that they themselves would be left vulnerable to the loopholes that would be born of this unregulated access. Worse, they may attempt to monopolize the data they've scraped through additional action, leading to what could be the greatest act of public thievery to known history.

As an artist myself, my own personal emotions cannot be contained in regards to this blatant, desperate show of corporate greed. If one day I see an eerie simulacrum, similar to my own work, it would all but crush my spirit. These people do not care about the life behind the near incalculable amount of art being made and shared on the internet. They merely seek to squeeze as much profit out of a trend that they themselves have artificially extended themselves for the sake of money.

Analytics show that the downfall of ai as a competent business model is impossible to avoid, and that its profitability, despite their own greedy efforts, is on the decline. Don't allow them to upend our legal system just so they can go on beating a dying horse for all its worth.
