General Comment

It seems like poor planning to let large corporations that have already abused copyrighted materials to have even more access to private content. It seems likely to greatly damage much of the creative pursuits in America if the creators have not even the appearance of a way to protect their works from being stolen and regurgitated by any AI that cares to scrape their works. Besides, there should be more focus on preventing over reliance on AI than on building machines to churn out meaningless pieces of media that is only going to profit already engorged corporations at the cost of further straining natural resources and energy. It would be better to focus AI development on tediously repetitious tasks that take away from people's lives than to try and stomp out any creative human work in a mad scrambling for additional corporate profiteering.
