General Comment

GenAI is not the future; it is theft. It steals from the livelihood of artists, and then creates profit off of that theft. Tech companies have created a specific category of large language models that are incredibly impractical, and useful only for stealing; in fact, they have openly admitted that they were only able to build GenAI LLMs by taking data from online, without ever asking permission or giving credit. Now, they are insisting that this specific type of LLM - ie, 'Generative AI' - is just as valid as other LLM breakthroughs, even though the only way they can be profitable and useful is if their theft is made legal. This is a terrible idea, and they should not be given permission to steal.
