General Comment

AI has shown to overall offer no real benefits to the public. These programs use, without permission, information published across the web and teach their AI to steal what makes them appealing only to then churn out a sub-optimal result. They need heavy regulation and the educated public has shown they would much rather a real human being working on their products instead of a lazy plagiarized regurgitation. The more we allow companies and private sectors to use these programs without regulations, the more they will infringe on real people's freedoms, properties, and opportunities. Companies are simply using them to try and maximize work output, and minimize the resources to do them, which really translates to, taking people's jobs, and releasing a lower quality product. Regulate AI, pay real people, respect real people, companies are not people.
