General Comment

I am an artist who relies on strong copyright protection to support my livelihood and, in turn, allow me to continue to put money back into the economy through the purchase of materials and equipment. Allowing AI companies to utilize my hard work at zero cost or risk to them would threaten to put myself and so many artists like me out of a job. Research has shown that there are ethical and legal ways to go about collecting data to train AI models on, and it would not be difficult for these companies to hold themselves to those standards.

I am firmly against any exemptions to copyright law made in the interest of supposed "national security" as they directly harm countless hard-working Americans like myself.
