General Comment

If US's government is really worried about AI and its harms, then you only have two options:

1- Ban fake AI (as known as generative AI) from the world. Yes, ban. All mess caused by this technology existence wouldn't happened if it was banned at all. It was better when never existed.

And no, I'm not talking about AI in general, but just the "generative" AI (that it's not AI, it's just a marketing term)

2- Regulate so hard to the point will not cause any harm anymore.

Ensure copyright laws protect creators (mainly small creators), ensure transparency and consent to the data and the MAIN POINT:

LIMIT THE QUANTITY OF WORK AND DATA USED. If those programs are just tools like companies says, so it'll not be a problem if there's a limit of what can use and what can do, right? (for example, models only allowed to use 3000 works/data). The lack of limit it's one of the main things helped to cause all this mess. And don't forget about not letting a third person put data to the AI (how it'll know it's the person's data and not someone else?).

Those two ways can both protect people and not let people lost their jobs.

Many of my career choices had suffered from job loss and "AI" companies aim to do more models to different careers, it'll cause more and more jobs loss. YES, THOSE COMPANIES KNOW THE HARM THEY'RE DOING. Like, Midjourney and Stability's CEOs admitted they knew their models existance would cause jobs loss; Sam Altman did say he doesn't think people losing their jobs, and so on.

And I don't need to mention this technology is causing AI slop and more misinformation in the internet and HARMING THE ENVIRONMENT.

I'm suffering from anxiety since this started, not just me, but other people also. More people fear what'll happen to the in the future.

I hope US does the right thing and stop all this in a effective way, otherwise we'll be definitely doomed
