General Comment

Corporations should not be able to bypass copyright laws. AI is trained on material without consent for the owners. Corporations have always litigiously defended copyright no matter how slight, even violating obvious fair use laws. They should not be able to bypass the laws just because the shoe is on the other foot. They have an overwhelming advantage against artists already, able to quash legal issues with their money. This will just make it worse. Generative AI art is the rich stealing from the poor, and laws like this will completely shut down numerous industries as artists, musicians and writers will stop creating works. This in turn will then shut down the generative AI industry itself, which relies on stealing new works.
