General Comment

Enforce copyright on AI companies, just like we do on everyone else. Property rights matter, the US was FOUNDED on them. Weakening copyright in this instance creates a laundering mechanism for intellectual property. Maybe companies think they want this right now, but they'll be spitting nails when they realize some random AI company can now ingest their proprietary IP and spit it back out for anyone who wants it. Once Boeing finds out people can ask OpenAI for its proprietary engineering plans and drug companies discover their formulas being handed out, it's going to be too late to stick this genie back into the bottle. Other countries will be able to ignore US copyright this way too. Think more than two seconds ahead of this, please. The entire US economy depends on it.
