General Comment

It is patently absurd to make a special legal carve-out for AI in copyright law. Every respectable legal scholar agrees that it is an absurd violation of both the letter and the spirit of the Copyright clause of the Constitution. "Exclusive right" means "exclusive," not "exclusive of everything except the whim of an AI-infatuated executive who thinks he's the special-est little boy." What encouragement does it provide to science and art for scientists and artists to see their hard work fed into the maw of the slush machine without their consent? None. There is no encouragement, only the discouragement and disparagement of human creativity. No unconstitutional carve-out.
