General Comment

In a slide on a presentation from IBM in the 70s reads “A computer can never be held accountable, so has increasingly been used to make management decisions”

To put a computer in charge of anything with NO accountability is the worst idea I’ve ever heard. Computer engineers and scientists knew it then, and most know it now.

There needs to be a human being or a group of human beings that can be held accountable for any conclusion this (often very erroneous) machine makes. This is a terrible idea.
