General Comment

OpenAI and all generative AI products are not matters of national security, they are a quick dollar to be made in place of real human creativity and do not hold any future for America and the rest of the world. Allowing models to scrape and train off of anything the Internet holds will, at best, amount to an expensive toy, and at worst, will inundate the Internet proper with valueless "content" that will be used to endlessly and cyclically train itself with. There is no "national security threat" to keeping the law and requiring permission and due compensation for a company to use copyrighted work in any capacity. In fact, this change would have the exact opposite effect in that OpenAI would have access to private legal documents and images to train from so long as they exist on the Internet. Please do not allow OpenAI to bend the law around their own agenda.
