General Comment

The AI industry is built on stolen data, as LLMs cannot be trained solely on open source information. The copyright owners of this data did not give consent for their data to be used this way, and allowing the industry to steal invalidates all copyright protections.

In addition, the AI industry is a speculative bubble which will not ever be profitable without government rescue. There is simply no market for the tools they offer, which is why they are continuously raising funds instead of selling products.

Finally, the resources required to train and serve these models are environmentally disastrous, and will only increase as they grow and competitors try to come to market.

There is simply no benefit to the people of the United States to support these immoral companies and we should let them try to operate under the free market and existing laws .
