General Comment

Copywrite law is clear and as a creator LLMs like the ones OpenAI uses violate my rights of ownership over my own creations. It's something that MUST be observed as there are too many ways for it to be abused. Imagine a small company generating a princess-style image for promotion of an adult brand and the AI system spits out something that looks straight out of Disney. Don't they have a right to protect their brand and their work from not only copycats, but from association with various products. Consent MUST be obtained from the original creators before anything can be added to a training model in order for capitalism to still flourish.
