General Comment

I am an award-winning author of multiple books. My work has been stolen by generative AI companies without permission to train their plagiarism machines, and I find this outrageous. I am far less bothered by ordinary piracy -- but the pirate sites are not by and large demanding a legal right to steal without consequence.

Generative AI is garbage, it produces garbage, and the statement that their business model only works if they can steal without consequence should be treated as garbage. Generative AI steals from authors and artists, but it also creates absolute mountains of trash that anyone looking for books, art, or information now has to wade through.

We need to move on from generative AI, and the companies hyping it should be told that they can sink or swim but they can no longer steal.
