General Comment

Please do not listen to openAI's request to make them immune to copyright infringement. This is a horrible idea for as it will remove a fundamentally important aspect of creation of art. If corporations are able to freely steal from any citizen no one will have an incentive to publish the works that are foundational for the ai software in the first place, as they will not have the assurance of being able to profit off of their own works. It is a blatantly harmful suggestion that flies in the face of everything that makes the American film industry amazing, and art as a whole. In addition, it will make the public less safe as corporations will slowly gain the ability to put out more convincing misinformation.
