General Comment

I have seen several jokes on the internet about how individuals, such as college-level science majors, lack understanding when it comes to the importance of relatively basic concepts such as "sharing" and "being a good person", but to see multiple agencies that are (allegedly) composed of these exact individuals request permission to steal and use material without the consent of either the creators or owners is sickening, and fills me with a sense of dread for a future of misplaced priorities, government approved theft, and a lack of security for the average person. This "request for information" is just a pretty word cover for what it actually is; a request for theft.
