General Comment

Allowing AI to legally steal every piece of artwork in perpetuity will kill the entire creative industry.

First, it will make creating ANY kind of art unsustainable as a profession.

Second, artists, an already difficult profession, will add to federal expenses by needing to rely government benefits.

Third, AI art will reach a singularity. With no one making new art, AI will only have AI art to reference, preventing any new art from being made.

Forth, the singularly inferior art, literally singular, made by AI will become unavoidable, causing demand to crash. The businesses will crash.

Finally, with AI dying after putting all artists out of business, all creative industries will die. Billions and billions of revenue lost. No culture to export to further the colonialist causes.

This is just laughably bad idea and one of the most blatant examples of capitalism promoting EXTREMELY short turn profit over any level of viability.

Do not give these companies a free lunch. Make them find ways to get their aggregators to make art without overt theft. Creativity is driven by limitations.

Not that any of this will matter a dam to any conservative. AI art is the aesthetic of modern fascism after all.
