General Comment

Literally nobody wants AI. People put their hearts and souls into creating works of art, into literature and graphic design, they put in sweat and tears and feelings and effort. Things are already bad enough for artists, especially the ones who rely on paid commissions for necessities. Letting AI steal everything, chew it up and spit it back out in a mishmash of worthless nonsense is only going to make things worse. It will flood the market with garbage, and it will convince people that effort and passion and hard work don't mean anything. I am an artist myself, I draw as a hobby for myself and my close friends because it makes me happy. And seeing these worthless computer programs that LITERALLY NOBODY WANTS is tainting that. It's tainting a hobby that's helped me form real personal connections with people, sharing our work and spreading joy. AI is the complete antithesis of creativity, anyone can pick up a pencil and learn to draw. AI is theft, plain and simple, and it's a tax on the world's resources that humanity cannot pay. Nobody wants AI. nobody wants their hours, days, weeks, years of hard work and practice and effort and love for their projects to become meaningless and cheap and exploitable. Nobody wants AI.
