General Comment

AI should not get special treatment, by allowing it to usurp copyright protection for no good reason other than their profits, it would be actively putting a private product above the law. AI has done nothing to earn this aside from simply demanding it. If a business cannot exist or succeed without theft and exploitation of the american public, it does not deserve to do so.

To let it do so would be a clear bias saying that the copyright system can not only be abused, but absolutely ignored if the person or company in question has enough money or enough powerful investors.

It does not improve public life.

It does not do its job even a fraction as well as its profiteers claims.

Giving them unprecedented access to whatever they wish to the benefit of no one but its stock holders, and in fact would harm many more, would prove that such crimes are legal to the rich.

A man had his life destroyed by Nintendo for matters infinitesimally smaller in their transgression than this, the only difference being its a company with leverage, and not a regular citizen.
