General Comment

I've been a writer and creator since I was a child. Now in my mid-30s I continue to work and create and I'd love to get to make a living off of my own work and ideas. But the legalization of AI using whatever it wants as trainable material makes it harder. It means companies can steal chances from me and thousands of other people while using our work - and never offering us compensation for what they've taken. It benefits those who don't work, who choose not to, who prefer to devalue the talent we develop through time and effort and in the end it benefits people burning through billions of dollars - money that most of the people actually trying to create would be able to live on. AI is wasteful, an endless bucket, being promoted by charlatans, liars, and people saying it is impossible to stop - as long as they don't need to pay people for training material. The legalization of AI says they can do whatever they want because the people who make art they care for, that they want to make a living at, don't matter. It says that allowing the loss of jobs for the low quality work that AI produces is acceptable. That this heartless and soulless work, that wastes water and energy is a fine use of time. The people this benefits are the people who want to cut corners, to not do research, to not put in effort, to devalue the skills made to make something worthwhile. Opening up anything they can find for training material is at least a violation on thousands of copyrights, if not the core trust that this is a country where the execution of ideas has value.
