General Comment

I am an everyday middle-class American-- an elementary art teacher and a children's book author and illustrator, who previously worked in game design for the educational game "Poptropica."

I am utterly appalled that any branch of the US government would allow AI big tech corporations to pillage our creative work without our consent-- work that we have spent a lifetime building and honing. This work is our livelihood.

AI does not "train" on copyrighted work. It steals it, reconfigures it, and spits it back out without any sort of compensation. It is robbing people who have worked tirelessly, and putting millions of careers in jeopardy.

The US must stop allowing Big Tech to trample actual people. Gen AI needs to be heavily restricted, and never allowed to steal personal works without full permission. When a government stops protecting everyday citizens, and instead favors dishonest Big Tech practices, then that government has utterly failed. And people will remember.
