General Comment

This is an attempt to legalize theft for the benefit of the rich, once again. To say that AI should be given broad immunity to Lawsuits for this theft is akin to saying that I should not be held responsible for stealing decorations off of people's yards. The artwork and Media put out by artists was not put out as free to use commercially. It was shared to be viewed, not taken, in the same way that my neighbors put gardens, or lights or decorations in the yard. Them being publicly viewable does NOT mean the viewer is the owner.

America does not Need to stay "On top of AI". Generative AI destroys jobs, creates lower quality products, and does not save money for the consumer. It's benefits for humanity have all been lies made to sell a product. It bleeds money for the very companies who work in the tech space, and has proven itself to be one long case of fraud that can only prop itself up on the work stolen from artists. People worldwide have shown a disinterest in AI. It's only reason for existing is that the people on top of it's business model are able to continually manipulate investors into a promise for a return next time. A return that never comes.

If this technology was being used to recreate movies by Disney, Paramount, or Warner Brothers, you'd not even be pushing for this. You have proven that you're only okay with pushing this into law because you are okay stealing from your citizens, for the falsely promised profit of larger corporations. This is only coming this far because you don't see the hard work of American artists, authors, and actors as valuable. You don't see the average American as valuable.

Also, if a company cannot survive without stealing, and having that theft protected by the government, then the company clearly does not deserve to exist.
