General Comment

The intent behind copyright -- behind intellectual property in general -- has always been to encourage the creation of more art (more inventions, etc.) by protecting the right of the creator to profit from their work, and thereby to support themselves in the creation of that work. Allowing a corporation to ignore copyright in pursuit of making its own product that can then be used, and WILL be used, to cannibalize the profits and therefore the livelihoods of creators, runs directly counter to the entire reason such laws exist. It makes a mockery of our legal system, and while the current administration appears to consider laws a mere obstacle between them and profits for the chosen few, I hope we can continue to rely on other elements of our government to hold the line on behalf of the citizen public.
