General Comment

This is an outrageous and hideous overstep. Copyright and intellectual property laws and regulations are among some of our most important safeguards from very, VERY costly and time consuming litigation in this country and around the world. Feeding protected creative works into a slop generating, resource-sucking embarrassment of a company like OpenAI cannot be allowed. If a company can't survive without stealing from everyone else, they shouldn't be in business. If McDonald's runs out of French fries, they don't go around robbing Wendy's and Burgers King, snatching fries from the kitchen AND right from the customers' trays. Why would we let a tech company do anything remotely like that? It's unprofessional at best. Certainly not worthy of funneling money into when we could be-oh I don't know-funding cancer treatments and research. OpenAI is a true source of financial waste. The government shouldn't give them the time of day, much less access to all of the info they want. Stop shoveling resources into a gaping maw that does nothing but steal and try to sell you gold painted turds claiming their 24k nuggets. Americans don't want any more "huggets", we want some damn accountability.
