General Comment

Generative AI is reliant on intellectual and creative theft, and it harms real artists and creative talents, as well as polluting the culture that consumes it. Generative AI and similar LLM tools should not be supported or used by the United States government generally, and only possibly supported in limited scientifically rigorously evaluated research applications.

In addition to harming the livelihoods of artists, stealing and corrupting the work of precious creators, and degrading the body of creative output, the infrastructure and resources required to power generative AI processing are harmful to their communities and environments. OpenAI and similar models should not be allowed to corrupt America's future.
