General Comment

Large Language Models and the tools made with generative "AI" have been given too much credit for too little material use. They are over-hyped. OpenAI was a nonprofit for a reason before tech and venture capitalist figures like Sam Altman took over. The business that exists is not profitable, supported by larger businesses on the promise of a In amazing breakthrough. A breakthrough that might not be coming.

In the meantime, LLM tools are already affecting the livelihoods of thousands of Americans. Writers and artists are out of jobs. Actors are striking to retain ownership of their FACES. And OpenAI and other companies are chomping at the bit to scrape every written text and shove it into their machine, regardless of who owns the lovingly-crafted words.
