General Comment

These major companies with so much money are demanding the government to step in and make it legal to steal the work of artists of all varieties and backgrounds, simply because of a hypothetical foreign threat?

How is it that our work isn't considered valuable, but is somehow worthy of having a governmental body force it to be given away? This isn't some great voluntary action for the betterment of mankind; This is simply theft for their profit off our hard work without so much as a please or a thank you.

We don't make content for free use. If we WANTED to do that we simply would and there would be dialogue being had. Instead, this is just forcibly ripping off our own material from our hard work, and giving it to a giant corporation to make uninspired nonsense with; and being told that we have no right as artists to be upset about it.

Honestly it's beyond insulting, and a spit in the face to artists to have their lively hood be taken advantage of by corporations who are too lazy to put in the work themselves; and require stealing from others in order to make money.
