General Comment

The entire concept for this "Plan" is completely ludicrous and tries to frame actions clearly detrimental to the public and specific fields a whole in some kind of flowery light like it's a good thing. No, it is not a good thing to remove all regulation on what AI can do, steal from, compile, or perform in any capacity unless it actively benefits something practical like its use in medicine. Which it most certainly will not be used for if this plan goes through. It will just be used by cheapskates and fat cats not wanting to pay people for actually doing human work so they can save a few more dollars for their giant hoard of wealth. There's no point in removing restrictions because the technology is already being abused more than its being helpful, and removing the restrictions will just actively make things worse. It makes things worse for the environment because the technology is already a massive waste of energy. It makes things worse for the job market because CEOs and other executive types will use it as an excuse to not have real people on their payroll. It makes things worse for artists in any fields because AI just steals and compiles the work of others into freak piles of garbage with no actual purpose or reasoning behind it. You can try dressing it up as much as you want, but at the end of the day, the uses of AI have already been a detriment to society, so removing any restrictions on it so the "private sector" can churn out more energy guzzling garbage is an awful idea that won't help anyone. Which is on track for this current administration of self-absorbed, delusional, idiotic monsters in human skin, and I'm sure this entire RFI will be disregarded on top of being rigged to hell and back.
