General Comment

AI companies should not be permitted to train their models or programs on copyrighted content. AI companies profit off of their models and are marketing them as competition for professional writers, and therefore training AI on copyrighted works is not fair use. It is theft of people's rightful property. If a company wants to exist, it has to be able to pay it's costs, and AI is no exception. Also, AI is extremely unreliable and a poor investment. Violating our laws for broken, inefficient, ineffective programs like AI is a fool's position. Make them prove themselves on the open market first for real instead of giving them a handout by letting them cheat authors out of their copyrighted work.
