General Comment

Generative AI is a blight not just upon the art world, but the United States especially. US history has long highlighted the individual nature and focus of our great country, of our rights and safeguards for the content we as human individuals create and contribute to a greater national fabric either for profit or to speak to a broader class. Gen AI, really any model that requires training from copywritten sources, violates those rights, violates the distinctively American history that has defined the American arts and made it stand out from the European, the Soviet Socialist collective, and the totalitarian state demanded art worlds.

These generative AI companies are snakeoil salespersons trying to offset their hefty loses by thefting from honest and hard working Americans. Major companies such as Microsoft and Google have recognized the fallacy of heavy AI investment and cut back funding significantly because they recognize how much of a wasteful money pit generative AI and its associates are. OpenAI internally knows this but would rather lie to the faces of the citizens of this great nation in their pursuit of profit. These generative AI companies are not only deeply un-American with how they violate the copyright of honest American citizens and groups, but they are also not loyal to the nation. Any company can feign loyalty then buzz off to another nation when they determine it is cheaper to produce their products there at the cost of American jobs and taxes.

As an American citizen, I do not condone the public funding of generative AI projects, I do not condone the use of precious tax dollars and valuable American energy on wasteful products that only harm American citizens by theft of both copyright and jobs, and I do not condone the environment and financial harm these companies will do the American people and the great environment we are so lucky to have compared to the rest of the world. Generative AI is deeply un-American, violates the individual American citizen by robbing them even with copyright, and belongs to companies that will never hold loyalty to our great nation and only believe in profits despite all the harm they create in the name of it. We cannot allow this to occur for the sake of the American individual and in honor our nation's historical heritage in regards to the arts. To accept would be an absolute rejection of that past instead of honoring our legacy.
