General Comment

We need an option to force companies to remove personal information from training documents. I recently competed on a US game show, and now there are at least 2 AI-created profiles of me on private fan sites, with no 'author' to contact to request removal. The information they have collected, about me and other contestants, could not possibly have come from publicly available sources, as some of it is behind paywalls and institutional logins. It is also at least partially wrong; hallucinated based on the little available information there is. This creates real professional and personal risks. At the moment I have no way of removing this information from whatever AI was used to come up with this information.
