

PUBLIC SUBMISSION

As of: March 21, 2025
Received: March 15, 2025
Status: [REDACTED]
Tracking No. m8b-0pej-mgx0
Comments Due: March 15, 2025
Submission Type: API

Docket: NSF_FRDOC_0001

Recently Posted NSF Rules and Notices.

Comment On: NSF_FRDOC_0001-3479

Request for Information: Development of an Artificial Intelligence Action Plan

Document: NSF_FRDOC_0001-DRAFT-6807

Comment on FR Doc # 2025-02305

Submitter Information

Name: Anne Kim

Address:

Email

: [REDACTED]

General Comment

As a longtime photographer and artist, I know my work is has been, illegally, fed into the AI models companies like OpenAI and Google are using for "training." I didn't consent when that work was shared in good faith, and with copyright and license terms applied. That work cost me money in equipment, time, and experience to create. If AI gets a hall pass on stealing from creators like me, how many businesses and creators would lose their livelihood when clients assume they can just get the mashed-up, plagiarized version without consequence?

AI does not create anything. It is a glorified blender. It takes the creations of others, chews and mashes them up, and then spits it back out. It isn't even a good blender, as it uses an ecologically devastating amount of resources like electricity and water; and even then, it can only produce anything at all if it's endlessly fed the work of others. But surely it spits out something useful some of the time-- no. It destroys so much to run, and what it generates is misinformation and soulless, watered-down transparent copies of the hard work of real artists and creators. If you ask it a question, it spits out nonsensical, chewed-up versions of the truth, which I can vouch for as a professional fact-checker.

And still, the people who own the plagiarism blender now believe they deserve some kind of special boy status where copyright doesn't apply to them. Otherwise-- as they've publicly admitted-- they can't make money by feeding real human's hard work, and livelihoods, into their blender without consent, credit, or compensation to those humans.

Decades ago we had to explain to kids why "if it's on the internet, it's free" wasn't true. Decades ago giant corporations shut down lovingly-made, entirely non-profitng fansites for having "copyrighted images." Why should AI get a pass not just to ignore copyright, but to make money off the work of others? It's outrageous.

Again, AI doesn't create anything. It steals the work and the livelihoods of American artists and creators to turn into profit for its already-billionaire owners. It costs all of us so much to exist at all, and it only benefits a very few, the same few who are asking for an exception.

Thank you for your consideration and the opportunity to voice my opinion.