General Comment

No AI company has the legal (or moral) right to simply take a person's copyrighted work and redistribute it for their own financial gain. There is no precedent for this level of labor theft, and no benefit to the economy by handing over the rights of other people's works to large corporations that already have massive amounts of money. If a corporation needs work, then they pay for it, that's how businesses operate. It's absolutely incredible to me that whether or not these massive projects fail is of any concern to the US government. They are illegal, make no pretext of being legal, offer no benefit to society and are in fact parasitic in nature, taking the hard work and resources of actual productive members of society who work tirelessly to inform, entertain and better our country and grind it up into mush to resell to the highest bidder. These tools are being used to make the internet basically unusable, and everyone hates them. Furthermore, once the boom is done the entire AI industry is going to crash and burn, creating additional damage to the economy.
