General Comment

Generative AI is nothing more than theft. To give OpenAI a shield from legal action would cause an absolute breakdown in copyright law and all of its related fields. Since it is obvious that nobody cares about the poorly-paid artists who actually do the work that AI steals from, perhaps it would be a good idea to remind you what lies in the chasm at the bottom of the slippery precipice you find yourselves perched atop: if you give AI the ability to openly steal from other artists and creatives, then you should also allow the IPs of the corporate media giants to become fair use. But we all know you don't want that. PROTECT ARTISTS, NOT THIEVES.
