General Comment

As an artist by trade, the idea that my livelihood - my intellectual property - can't be saved from theft by AI training is truly a horrible thought. What role does government fill but to protect the citizens from exploitation?

And what a horrible idea that an artist could spend years training and learning and working hard to build their craft, only to have it pillaged in an instant by a new technology, twisted, and spit back out for someone else's profit. This technology can't exist without the hard work of artists, and relies on their lack of consent to turn any kind of profit.

By allowing AI to undermine copyright law, and scrape artists hard work to train their models, you will be in essence making a huge swath of the American workforce obsolete. You will be harming thousands and thousands of hardworking Americans for the profit of a few. You will be doing to artists what was done to the Midwest rust belt when industry moved to china. And the effects on our art and media will be the same. Cheap, crappy replacements. Please, do the right thing, and hold ai up to the same standards that the rest of us must live by.
